Well, it's great to be back after a lengthy break during which, we notice, Theresa May and her crack team of complete idiots have managed not to advance Britain's move to an orderly withdrawal from the European Union at all, beyond literally squandering an entire year bitching, howling, threatening and finally giving in on the issue of the amount we have to pay as our so-called 'divorce bill' from the EU. That's it. That's the sum total of a whole year. Are these people completely deranged?

And speaking of deranged, it's incredible that Donald Trump is not only not in prison yet, but he's still in charge... but it's very heartening to note that Special Counsel Mueller's investigation into Trump's dirty dealings spanning decades is likely to bear the most delicious fruit imaginable before very long.

In this issue we're going to do a little catching up on world politics from the tail-end of last year to the present. Enjoy!

Spring Budget 2018 – Adrift in the ocean, Chancellor of the Exchequer Philip Hammond sits atop a huge Brexit bomb, offering nothing but pain to the country as Theresa May desperately clings to him.

The Palace of Westminster is revealed as a seething, taxpayer-funded den of iniquity when, following claims that police found a stash of extreme hard-core pornography on his office computer, he was accused of inappropriately touching a young journalist 30 years his junior and that he had signed up to the notorious adult infidelity dating website Ashley Maddison, sleazy former police officer, political thug and First Secretary of State Damien Green is finally forced to resign by Theresa May, who had shamefully continued to defend Green's unsavoury behaviour until the scandal reached epic proportions following the leaking of a shocking spreadsheet document naming and detailing mainly Conservative MPs guilty of sexual misconduct and harassment against women working in Parliament.

Sir Richard Branson - whose Virgin Group of companies is one of the greatest recipients of unjustified corporate welfare doled out by the privatisation-obsessed Conservative government - intervenes after Virgin Trains announce that they will no longer sell the Daily Mail newspaper on their trains following a large number of complaints from employees about the extreme right-wing paper's repeated vicious attacks on immigrants, the unemployed, the LGBT community and anyone (especially members of Parliament or judges) who oppose Brexit.

Obnoxious Conservative Ben Bradley scurries for cover and hurriedly tries to delete damning blog-posts and Tweets when it is discovered that he has called for unemployed working-class men to have vasectomies to stop them breeding, for struggling public sector workers to resign their jobs if they're unhappy with their wages (which have effectively fallen by 14-17% since 2010), and who also not only encouraged police brutality during the 2011 London riots, but also wanted the police to play "splat the chavs" with then-London Mayor Boris Johnson's newly-purchased (illegal) water cannons. Typically, despite Bradley's abhorrent eugenicist opinions, he continues to enjoy the full support of Theresa May...

While privately briefing reporters last week at the World Economic Forum in Davos, Switzerland, German Chancellor Angela Merkel mocked Theresa May, telling the reporters that when she asked the British Prime Minister what shape she wants the EU's post-Brexit relationship with the UK to look like, May said "Make me an offer". Merkel responded, saying "But you're leaving... we don't have to make you an offer, so come on, what do you want?", to which our clueless, useless Prime Minister replied "Make me an offer", upon which the two leaders became locked in an endless, futile loop...

Labour Party leader Jeremy Corbyn continues to cause consternation amongst the clear majority of anti-Brexit Labour Party members and MPs by continuing to support the principles of British withdrawal from the European Union. Corbyn's stubborn refusal to publicly address and placate the membership's alarm at his ideological position may yet cost him dearly.

Failed Conservative Party leadership challenger Andrea Leadsome, who has had to make do with the booby-prize of Environment Secretary, caused howls of derision and scorn when she stated during a heated BBC Newsnight programme interview on Brexit and the government's ongoing incompetence that "It would be helpful if broadcasters were willing to be a bit patriotic... I'm simply saying we all need to pull together as a country."

BRITISH DIPLOMACY

International Development Secretary Priti Patel and Foreign Secretary Boris Johnson faced widespread calls for their sacking last November. It was discovered that during a supposed private holiday to Israel (and so unaccompanied by any diplomats or civil servants), Patel not only had 12 unsanctioned meetings with high-ranking Israeli officials including Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, but had discussed channelling UK overseas aid money to the Israeli army. Patel eventually resigned, unlike Boris Johnson, who was directly responsible by way of a calamitous, incorrect statement made in the House of Commons for the Iranian courts doubling the prison sentence of a British journalist Nazanin Zaghari-Ratcliffe who was arrested as she holidayed with relatives and was accused of espionage. Mrs Zaghari-Ratcliffe is still rotting in prison.

March 29th 2017 - Theresa May unnecessarily invokes Article 50 of the Treaty on European Union, setting the 2 year countdown clock to Brexit ticking. Ten months later, and we still have no idea what form Brexit will take due to the utter incompetence and squabbling of British ministers. The government had been advised to first settle the issues of our 'divorce' bill, the legal status of EU nationals living in the UK, the thorny issue of the Northern Ireland border with the Republic of Ireland and whether or not we were leaving the Customs Union and Single Market before triggering Article 50, but May's pathetic desperation to placate warring factions within the Conservative Party to save her own miserable neck clearly took precedence over the economic well-being and future of Great Britain.

In an act of sheer cynical desperation following the loss of her Parliamentary majority at the last General Election, Theresa May shocks and disgusts the entire country by openly bribing the religiously-fanatical, terrorist-linked Democratic Unionist Party of Northern Ireland with £1.5bn she found down the back of the austerity sofa to ensure she has enough votes in the House of Commons to give her the majority she needs to push through Conservative legislation. Meanwhile, homeless people are dying on the streets because apparently there's no money to help them.

Autumn Budget 2017 - Chancellor of the Exchequer Philip Hammond blatantly ignores the NHS under-funding crisis and continues to cut welfare budgets and public spending.

In a vain attempt to somehow appear still relevant to 21st century politics, failed former Conservative Party leader Michael Howard, during a TV interview, invoked the memory of Margaret Thatcher's defence of the Falkland Islands as he promulgated the unfounded, xenophobic, tub-thumping Tory conspiracy theory that, under cover of Britain's Brexit process, the slippery Spanish might try and snatch back Gibraltar. Howard claimed that Theresa May would valiantly defend the territory and Britain's contested claim of sovereignty over the monkey-covered tax haven outcrop which also serves as a UK military and NATO base. Gibraltar is technically home to 8,464 registered offshore companies. Cui bono?

AP POLISH MEP JANUS KORWIN MIKKE

Polish MEP and founder of the right-wing libertarian Liberty Party Janus Korwin-Mikke (who in 1991 wanted to strip Polish women of the right to vote) caused yet more outrage recently during an EU plenary session on gender pay disparity when he claimed that 'Weaker', 'smaller', 'less intelligent' women must receive less pay than men because of their innate inferiority. For those considering giving him a swipe on Tinder, Mr Korwin-Mikke has also said in the past that: The general public should "not see the disabled on television", anyone giving money to an unemployed person "should have their hand cut off", the difference between rape and consensual sex is "very subtle", and "there is a hypothesis that the attitudes of men are passed to women by way of the semen which penetrates the tissue... now when contraceptives are much more in use, the women become much more independent". Go get him, ladies. What a catch!

Like the Red Box and the chancellor's glass of water, political artist Kaya Mar is a regular feature of budget day.

Here's his latest effort to mark Hammond's speech:

Kaya Mar photographed on Budget Day on Whitehall with his latest painting of Chancellor Philip Hammond.

Kaya Mar unveils his painting of Dr Dadabhai Naoroji, celebrating the centenary of his death, at the National Liberal Club on Whitehall Place, London.

A renowned Parsi intellectual, educator, cotton trader and political leader, Dr Naoroji was the first Indian to be elected to the British Parliament, sitting as a Liberal MP between 1892 and 1895 before returning to India where he co-founded the Indian National Congress.

Kaya Mar helps auction a painting he donated to raise money for the Great Ormond Street Hospital for Children at a packed charity gala hosted by Tas Restaurant, New Fetter Lane, EC4.
